BELONGING, UNITY & STRENGTH

EBANY HINDMARSH - TRYC MAGPIES

Proud of her Ngarigo and Wiradjuri heritage on her mother's side and Dharawal heritage on her father's side, Ebany Hindmarsh has drawn deeply on Culture, connection and sisterhood to inspire the design of TRYC Magpies Netball Indigenous training shirt, creating a piece that reflects belonging, unity and strength.

For Hindmarsh, being Indigenous "means deep connection and strength, there is so much strength in being connected to mob, connected to land and the way you feel spiritually when on Country."

The values passed down through Family and Culture continue to guide her in every part of life, shaping how she moves through sport, community and identity. "Lessons that come to mind are never be wasteful just take what you need and share what you can, always be kind and never be embarrassed of who you are."

That sense of grounding flows directly into her artwork, which tells a story of Women coming together through Netball, building lifelong bonds through shared journeys, travel and support both on and off the Court. "The story is one of Sisterhood and Women coming together travelling, gathering and supporting each other" Hindmarsh said.

When breaking down the design, Hindmarsh explains it as a layered journey. The base represents the many paths taken to the game, whether personal, team-based or long distances travelled simply to come together and play. Above that sit the Women of the Club, representing the strength and unity of the playing group, while the patterns at the top reflect individuality within teams that still fit seamlessly together. "We are sisters that choose each other and the Club is the extended family that we have chosen," Hindmarsh said.

At its heart, the design carries a simple but powerful message: Women supporting Women. A theme Hindmarsh intentionally wove through every element of the artwork. "I have used symbols that represent the journey of Women coming together supporting each other."

Seeing the design worn by both Junior and Senior players has been deeply emotional, with the artwork sparking conversations that allow culture to be shared, explored and understood more widely. "It's an incredibly proud feeling being able to create a story for the Netball Club, to see my artwork being worn by the Junior and Senior girls, it fills my heart with pride. I love sharing my Culture and I love when it triggers questions, it allows me to continue the storytelling of Generations before me."

For Hindmarsh, the visibility of Culture within Clubs and across Community Sport is essential to fostering belonging and inclusion. "Having dedicated rounds helps to create and build the sense of belonging when often people feel like they don't, it makes you want to get involved whilst feeling welcomed with open arms while doing it."

More than anything, Hindmarsh hopes the design leaves people with a lasting sense of connection and support. "I want people to see a Club that supports each other, no matter what journey they are on, and to know they will always have a Sister or a Family to support them."

During Indigenous Round, Hindmarsh's message is one of pride and presence. "Know that we are strong, we are proud and when given the chance to prove this we show up and deliver." For the next generation, her advice is simple, but carries the weight of lived experience and hope. "Just to stick with it you never know, one day, you will be the ones that younger generation will look up to and say if they can do it then so can I."

Proud Wiradjuri man Mark Flack grew up alongside the banks of the Murrumbidgee River in Narrandera, where culture, family and connection to Country helped shape the person he is today.

For Flack, being part of the Wiradjuri tribe is more than identity, it is belonging. It is connection to Generations before him, to community around him and to the stories and traditions that continue to guide him through life. As he has grown older, that connection has only deepened, becoming something he carries proudly both on and off the Field. "Being Indigenous just reminds me where I came from and who I belong to," Flack said. "I think the older I got the more the Culture grew on me and the more I embraced it. It's given me so much opportunity and life experiences that I'll embrace forever."

That deep sense of Culture, Connection and Community became the inspiration behind the design of the TRYC Magpies Indigenous Training Shirt, a piece that tells the story of not only a Football and Netball Club. It reflects the journeys taken by Players, Volunteers and Supporters, the pathways that lead People to the Club. "The design is just based around The Rock itself, the Men, Women and Kids involved within our Club along with the journeys and pathways to and from the Club and connections it has with the surrounding areas that bring everyone together," he said.

Being entrusted with designing the guernsey for the Magpies was something Flack described as both humbling and special, particularly seeing the way the wider Football and Netball Community has embraced the design and the meaning behind it. "It was an honour to be asked to design the shirts for the Club. I think it's great they incorporate it and everyone gets behind it," he said. "So many people have reached out saying what a good idea and hopefully more Clubs follow."

Across communities throughout the Riverina, Indigenous Round has become more than just a celebration during the season. It is an opportunity for Clubs and Communities to come together, listen, learn and acknowledge the world's oldest continuing Culture through the unifying power of Sport.

Across communities throughout the Riverina, Indigenous Round has become more than just a celebration during the season. It is an opportunity for Clubs and Communities to come together, listen, learn and acknowledge the world's oldest continuing Culture through the unifying power of Sport.

For Flack, seeing culture represented so proudly within Football and Netball is something that carries enormous significance, especially for the younger generation coming through. "I just hope people embrace the Culture, the celebration, everything that comes with it because it's such a unique Culture and has so much meaning for those that are a part of it," he said.

"And for the younger players coming through there's so much opportunity now for our Youth. If you put your mind to it and put the work in you'll be rewarded. Just surround yourself with good people and good things will happen."

Through stories, symbols and connection, Flack's design serves as a reminder that Indigenous Culture is not only something to be celebrated during a Round of Football and Netball, but something that continues to strengthen communities, inspire future generations and bring people together.
